AN OVERVIEW

This closing workshop of the RSARNCE Project offers a unique opportunity to review, assess and determine the legacy of our unique project involving the establishment of Citizen Entrepreneurship (CE) and the network of research institutions and academic researchers who have helped to deliver the project. Part of that legacy includes the passing of the research baton to young researchers through the inculcation of the concept of CE the identification of empirical evidence, the use of novel research methods and, critically, the engagement of citizens. This work augments the exciting new insights obtained from the work of the different partners across the world, with the expectation of a growing network over the next few years.

At this workshop 20 young participants will make group presentations of new research in work incorporating novel forms of peer review, reflection and discussion. The workshop will conclude with a panel discussion by 5 existing and new stakeholders of the project reviewing what we know of CE and where we hope to take it in the future.
